International Symposium

Multiple Forest Outputs: Silviculture, Accounting and Managerial Economics

Viterbo (Italy), 19th-21st May, 2011

CONTEXT, OBJECTIVE AND THEMES

Forests provide a multitude of values to society, ranging from commodities such as wood products and traditional non-market uses such recreation, to values often considered externalities such as clean air and water. Forest management must be developed in such a way that these diverse values are enhanced.

Sustainable forest management covers a wide range of management approaches. The spectrum includes an intensive managerial approach to maximize timber production, conservative approaches which sustain the multifunctional use of forests, where timber and ecological functions are jointly produced, and finally a preservative approach to maximize ecological function and excluding timber production completely.

The main provocative questions that SFM provides for forest researchers, and that we suggest to be adopted as main themes for the International Symposium in Viterbo, are:

- How can we identify the best silvicultural systems to achieve these aims for different forest types?
- What are the impacts on forest accounting?
- What are the effects on managerial economics?
- What tools can be used to sustain forests and their multiple uses?
- How do the experiences with SFM differ by country?

TARGET AUDIENCE

- Scientists from economics, accounting, social and political sciences;
- People from professional, environmental and political organizations;
- Students.
